

The Sandman and Subject Line Sagas present:

The Bagpipe Saga

A tale based loosely on stupid subject lines and snappy comebacks found in the Subject Line Sandbox throughout May 2009

Most of those little electronic ones and zeroes inside computers have made this world a better place.

For example, we'd never have got a man on the moon without them. We'd never have developed Teflon as a spin-off from the moon project. And we wouldn't have computer-aided design and manufacturing to ensure a Teflon layer gets spread evenly across the surface of any given frying pan.

And nowadays, without all those little electronic ones and zeroes – whether in computerized cash tills or our automobile control units - we'd never get our groceries home. Or cooked.

At least, not in non-stick cookware.

And those little electronic ones and zeroes that don't turn into graphics become letters and numbers on computer screens.

Most of those onscreen letters and numbers also make this world a better place.

The rest just become crap email subject lines.

So here for your entertainment, and to make sure all those electronic ones and zeroes don't go completely to waste ...

... adapted from the dross that landed in my InBox during May 2009 ...

... is a tale of greed, cloning, bizarre sexual practices and, er ...

... bagpipes.

Enjoy!

With a giant device you will feel a bigger man.

I'm not into bigger men. I like feeling large ladies, yes, Bigger men, no.

Your watch will be delivered to any destination.

Fabulous. If I wear it can I go too? By Submarine, maybe?

We know the way to stop the aging process.

Dying young, maybe?
